TV never did catch up

The only thing I know for sure about the 1966 Indianapolis 500 is that you could have won it on a slow horse. Kauai King would have taken every lap. The details of the race are as obscure as cave writings.

That's because I watched it on closed-circuit TV at my favorite theater. It was the most exciting show I have seen in a long time. I only wish I knew the plot.

If you find out who won—and how—will you please write to an announcer named Charles Brockman, care of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, Indianapolis, Ind., and let him know?

Charlie lost it in the turn all afternoon. He hung it on the wall in the first lap and never did catch up.

I have heard most of the great airwave boo-boos of our time—Clem McCarthy calling "Faultless" the winner of the 1947 Kentucky Derby, Graham McNamee calling almost any baseball game, Bill Stern lateraling off a football at the last desperate second when he saw he had called the wrong runner.

STAYING POWER

But for staying power, Charlie Brockman outdid them all. Charlie hung on all afternoon, wrong for almost five straight hours. To paraphrase Ted Husing, you can't lateral off a race car. So Charlie just went around crashing into walls along with the rest of the field.

The "race" once again was a four-wheeled cockfight. One guy who started the race in last position in Row 4, had crashed into a car in Row 2, before the whole field had even hit the starting line.

He scattered cars like a one-ton bowling ball. You had to wonder if these guys could be trusted to back out of a garage safely.

As a comedy record, it would be a best seller. There were times when you could swear it was Shelly Berman — or Bob and Ray. The theater I was in never howled more at Laurel and Hardy.

At one point, Charlie — who must have been in a cold sweat by that time — bellowed, "We have had a report there are only eight cars running!" Since counting eight does not require four years at Cal-Tech, the audience wondered why Charlie didn't take off his shoes and socks and check for himself, if necessary. Another time, he announced pathetically, "The public address system is announcing Jackie Stewart in the lead!"

He announced everybody but the fire truck for the lead before the afternoon was over, and once, hysterically described a wheel-to-wheel fight for second place, only to end up lamely admitting one of the cars was a lap behind, not five seconds behind.

"We've had such a juggling of positions, this could be a factor," he "explained" sheepishly. He was a market-picker in a heavy stock selloff — he was running well behind the transactions.

Graham Hill was leading the race several laps before Charlie caught up to him and then, when Jimmy Clark's pit crew started mistakenly to inform their man he was leading, poor Charlie almost started to sob.

The race was the biggest one-day attraction of vehicles since the Battle of Jutland, a bigger pile of scrap metal than Rommel left behind in Africa.

PLACE TO PARK

The winner drove like a guy looking for a place to park. The outcome was a great victory for Firestone tires and a great setback for milk.

The tires not only served the winner, but survived two hairy spin-outs by Jimmy Clark without even a flat spot. And winner Hill, a gaunt, moustachioed Britisher who looks as if he should be riding behind hounds instead of horsepower, grimaced and almost spat it out when called upon to drink the traditional quart of milk. But he hungrily kissed the Speedway Queen, showing not all upper-class tastes are decadent. It was the only thing about the race that didn't bore him.

Like Charlie Brockman, he admitted he hadn't the "foggiest" idea he was winning.
